Statement of Teaching Philosophy

My penchant for English language made me a passionate and effective teacher. New challenges in the global scenario and ever-increasing need for proficiency in language and soft skills put English teacher in an unenviable position and is expected to upgrade his/her skills on daily basis. I spared no effort in the performance of my profession and the same is testified from the students' feedback, respect from fellow teachers and commendation from my superiors. I wish to continue my research for the good of my students and for my academic progress.

Upgrading of knowledge is not the only focus for me. I believe in holistic approach and thus participating and organizing conferences and workshops widening my knowledge horizon. Holding various responsibilities, both academic and administrative, I fine-tuned my skills. Catering to the present needs of the students and the industry, I succeeded in creating a strategic system of training to the students for their Placements, Soft skills, Personality Development, Presentation skills etc. by implementing innovative approaches in teaching-learning process. The workplace demands are extremely different from what the student is accustomed to, keeping this in view I always remain conscious of the tag line: "I am teaching, are they learning?"

Facilitating organizational change in an environment characterized by increased accountability, competition, social diversity, and quality control is a significant challenge. Thus, I adore putting not just a professional face but more of a human face before my students. More interactive sessions and presentations on topics from all aspects of science and technology are the major features of my classes.

Teaching makes us read; Reading makes us think; Thinking is energy. I strongly believe this and always try to provide that energy to my students.
